

Suicide sadly remains all too prevalent in the transgender community. Unremitting discrimination takes its toll and transgender people pay the price for the prejudice of others. Sometimes, transgender people turn to suicide when they can't find work, housing, or other practical necessities of life. Here is some information about transgender people and suicide and resources to help prevent self-harm. Transgender lives are worth living.

SUICIDE RISKS FOR TRANSGENDER PEOPLE

In a survey NCTE conducted with the National Gay & Lesbian Task Force in 2009, 41% of the respondents said yes to the question, “have you ever attempted suicide?” According to health reports, 5 million, or 1.6%, of living Americans have attempted suicide during their lifetime. Our study asked if the respondent had ever attempted suicide while most comparable statistics refer to suicide attempts within the last year and so are difficult to compare.

According to the National Institutes of Mental Health, African-Americans, Hispanics and Asians have significantly lower suicide rates than whites or Native Americans; our sample showed opposite patterns of racial distribution. In our survey, African-Americans had an attempt rate of 45% , Hispanics were 44%, and multi-racial or other were 54%.

A person's work status had a significant impact on their likelihood of having attempted suicide.

Other risk factors included the degree to which a person is identifiable as transgender, with those who consider themselves as not being able to pass at 44%, those who are generally out about their transgender status at 44% and those who have only some of their identity documents in their preferred gender at 46%. Those who have medically transitioned (45%) and surgically transitioned (43%) have higher rates of attempted suicide than those who have not (34% and 39% respectively).

Education and income both impact suicide rates, with those with the lowest incomes of <$10,000 reporting suicide attempts at 54%, while those who are making more than $100,000 have less than half the rate of suicide attempt at 26%. Those who have not completed college have attempted suicide at the rates of 48-49%, while those who have completed college or graduate school had significantly lower rates at 33% and 31%.
